The Heart of Your Dog shows you how to teach your dog while fulfilling its highest needs and building a deep relationship.

Description:

Your dog wants to have a deep life-long relationship with you. It is an invitation. The Heart of Your Dog will help you identify your dog's highest unmet needs. You will learn how to fulfill those needs and better communicate with your dog. In the process you will build new connections to your dog's heart.

You will also learn how to teach the essential commands your dog should know. They are specially designed to bring you and your dog closer. Your dog will be inspired to learn all it can about you and your world. Throughout its life you will be rewarded with the constant love and gratitude that flows from the heart of your dog.

With patience and understanding you will be amazed at what your dog can bring to you and your family. The result will be your dog's profound happiness.

Excerpt:

"Pets are toys. Dogs are not toys. If you want a pet, get a pet rock. Dogs are living beings, capable of complex thoughts and emotions. They have real feelings. Furthermore, your dog has no concept of one being possessed by another living being. You will never be able to teach this owner/owned relationship to your dog. What your dog does understand is belonging to a pack. Think of your dog as a member of your family/pack. When everyone in your family understands and accepts it, you'll be on the same wavelength with your dog."

More Excerpts:

“Until recently, it was believed that wolf packs were always ruled by a powerful alpha-male that subdued the rest of the pack.”

“The new research has found that wild wolf packs are more like families. Leadership is acquired by consent from family relationships and not from aggressive dominance and submission behaviors.”

“Knowing that wolf packs behave like families is good news because it suggests a better way to work with your dog to establish a deeper relationship.”

“When you become a responsible parent/leader in your family, you’re naturally protective and nurturing. You don’t impose your will unnecessarily. You’re the leader by consent. When your dog accepts your leadership, you should reciprocate by doing everything you can to fulfill your dog’s needs.”

About Ed Noyes and the book. . .

While pursuing a career as an entrepreneur and consultant, Ed raised a number of dogs from puppyhood. He spent time carefully analyzing the different ways they learned. He also observed dozens of family dogs and the way human attitudes seemed to affect dog happiness and companionship. Traditionally a well-behaved dog has always been the prime objective, yet even when that was achieved he noticed something seemed to be missing.

New discoveries about wolf packs and how dogs think forced him to reconsider his relationships with his dogs. To Ed it meant that traditional training had it backwards. Dogs aren’t dumb animals that have to be forced to socialize with humans.

Ed was inspired to develop his Hierarchy of Canine Familiaris Needs to explain the most important considerations in teaching his dogs. His techniques incorporate this revelation.

If you want a circus dog or a junkyard dog, you’ll need to look elsewhere. His book is about building a deep lifelong companionship relationship with your dog. It’s about discovering the heart of your dog.

Basic Vocabulary Every Family Dog Should Know

All these commands (and more) are discussed in The Heart of Your Dog along with easy-to-follow teaching instructions.

No, What is It?, Come Here, Right Now, Stay, Sit, Lie Down, Poor Dog, It's Alright, Good Dog, Bad Dog, Quiet, Speak, Hop Up, Hop Over, Look Out, Get, Get Back There, Get Over There, Let's Go, Go Ahead, Drop It, Pick it Up, Bring It Here, and Get It.

Other teaching instructions include Housebreaking, Jumping on You and Your Guests, Separation Anxiety, and more.

WARNING:

Watch out! As you teach your dog using these techniques, your dog will not stop with your lessons. I promise it will carefully listen and learn new words on its own.
